The Lizzie Borden House: Fall River, Massachusetts

On August 4, 1892, the quiet town of Fall River, Massachusetts, was rocked by a double murder. Lizzie Borden, a young woman from a prominent family, was accused of killing her father and stepmother with an ax. The trial that followed was a national sensation, and it has remained a source of fascination for true crime enthusiasts to this day.

The Lizzie Borden House is now a museum, and it offers tours that give visitors a glimpse into the scene of the crime. The house is still furnished with the original furniture, and it is said that Lizzie's ghost still haunts the halls.

The Amityville Horror House: Amityville, New York

The Amityville Horror House is one of the most famous haunted houses in America. In 1975, the Lutz family moved into the house, and they soon began to experience a series of strange and terrifying events. They claimed to have seen ghosts, heard disembodied voices, and witnessed objects moving on their own.

The Lutz family eventually fled the house, and their story was turned into a book and a movie. The Amityville Horror House has since been the subject of numerous paranormal investigations, and it remains a popular destination for ghost hunters.

The Black Dahlia House: Los Angeles, California

The Black Dahlia House is the site of the gruesome murder of Elizabeth Short, a young woman who was found mutilated and posed in a vacant lot in 1947. The case remains unsolved, and it has been the subject of numerous books, movies, and television shows.

The Black Dahlia House is now a private residence, and it is not open to the public. However, it remains a popular destination for true crime enthusiasts, and it is often featured in tours of haunted Los Angeles.

The Manson Family Murders: Los Angeles, California

In the summer of 1969, Charles Manson and his followers committed a series of horrific murders in Los Angeles. The victims included pregnant actress Sharon Tate and four of her friends. Manson and his followers were eventually convicted of the murders, and they were sentenced to life in prison.

The houses where the Manson Family murders took place are now private residences, but they remain a popular destination for true crime enthusiasts. The Tate-LaBianca House, where Sharon Tate and her friends were murdered, is now a museum, and it offers tours that give visitors a glimpse into the scene of the crime.

The Columbine High School Massacre: Columbine, Colorado

On April 20, 1999, two students at Columbine High School in Colorado went on a shooting rampage, killing 13 people and injuring 24 others. The massacre was one of the deadliest school shootings in American history, and it sent shockwaves across the nation.

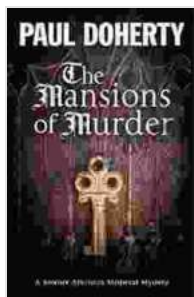

The Columbine High School building where the massacre took place was demolished in 2004, and a new school was built on the site. However, the memory of the massacre still lingers, and it is a reminder of the darkness that can exist in the hearts of young people.

The Impact of Murder Houses

Murder houses have a profound impact on the communities in which they are located. They become symbols of the darkness that can lurk within the human heart, and they can serve as a reminder of the fragility of life.

Murder houses can also have a negative impact on property values in the surrounding area. Potential buyers may be hesitant to purchase a home that is associated with such a tragic event. In some cases, murder houses may even be unsellable.

Murder houses are a reminder of the darkness that can lurk within the human heart. They are places where unspeakable horrors have taken place, and they have become symbols of the fragility of life. While they may be fascinating to visit, it is important to remember the victims of these crimes and the impact that these houses have had on the communities in which they are located.
