Born in London in 1991, Gannon's love for writing began at a young age. She started her blog, "Over the Moon," at the age of just 18, sharing her thoughts and experiences with the world. After graduating from university with a degree in English Literature, Gannon worked as a journalist for a number of publications, including The Guardian and The Independent.

In 2015, Gannon launched Olive's Ocean, a digital space dedicated to empowering women and encouraging open and honest conversations about mental health. The community quickly grew in popularity, and Gannon soon began hosting live events and workshops. In 2017, she published her first book, "The Sweet Spot," a collection of essays and advice on finding balance and happiness in life.

Gannon's success is due in no small part to her ability to connect with her audience on a deeply personal level. She is open about her own struggles with mental health, and her writing often explores themes of anxiety, depression, and self-acceptance. Her honesty and vulnerability have made her a role model for many young people.

In addition to her writing and community work, Gannon is also a passionate advocate for mental health awareness. She has spoken out about the importance of seeking help when needed, and she has worked with a number of organizations to raise awareness of mental illness.

Gannon's influence extends far beyond her own work. She has been featured in major publications such as The New York Times and Vogue, and she has been recognized for her contributions to women's empowerment and mental health awareness. In 2019, she was named one of the BBC's 100 Women, a list of influential and inspiring women from around the world.

Olive Emma Gannon is a true creative powerhouse. Her writing, podcasting, and community work have made a significant impact on the lives of many people. She is a role model for young women, and her work is a reminder that it is possible to overcome challenges and live a happy and fulfilling life.
