The punk rock years of 1988-2006 were a dark period for the genre. After the initial explosion of punk in the late 1970s, the early 1980s saw a decline in the popularity of punk rock. By the mid-1980s, punk was all but dead. However, in 1988, a new wave of punk bands emerged, and the genre began to experience a resurgence.

This new wave of punk bands was different from the original punk bands of the late 1970s. The new bands were more aggressive and nihilistic, and their music was often darker and more violent. This new style of punk rock became known as "dark punk".
