

We Lift Our Voices: A Conversation with Rev. Dr. Roderick Belin

Q: Dr. Belin, thank you for taking the time to speak with me today. I'd like to start by asking you about your book, "We Lift Our Voices." What inspired you to write this book?

A: I was inspired to write this book because I believe that the Black church has a unique and important role to play in the fight for racial justice. The Black church has always been a source of hope and strength for our community, and it has a long history of fighting for justice. I wanted to share some of the stories of the Black church's involvement in the civil rights movement, and I wanted to offer a call to action for all people of faith to join the fight for racial equality.

Q: In your book, you talk about the importance of prayer and action in the fight for racial justice. Can you explain why you believe these two things are so important?

A: Prayer is important because it connects us to God and gives us strength and guidance. When we pray, we are asking God to help us to be faithful witnesses to his love and justice. Action is important because it is how we put our faith into practice. We cannot simply pray for racial justice; we must also work to create a more just and equitable world.

Q: You have been a leader in the Black church and social justice movements for many years. What do you see as the most important challenges facing our community today?

A: I believe that the most important challenges facing our community today are racism, poverty, and violence. Racism is still a systemic problem in our society, and it continues to have a devastating impact on the lives of Black people. Poverty is also a major problem in our community, and it is often linked to racism. Violence is another major challenge, and it is often a result of poverty and racism.

Q: What do you think are the most important things that we can do to overcome these challenges?

A: I believe that the most important things that we can do to overcome these challenges are to work together and to build relationships across racial lines. We need to work together to create a more just and equitable society, and we need to build relationships across racial lines so that we can better understand each other and work together to solve our problems.

Q: Dr. Belin, thank you for your time. I am inspired by your work, and I believe that your book will be a valuable resource for people who are working for racial justice.
